AI Assistant: Hi! I'll help you complete your registration. What's your full name?

You: John Smith

AI Assistant: Thanks! Now I need your current address.

You: 123 Main Street, Anytown, CA 90210

AI Assistant: Got it. What's your date of birth? Please use MM/DD/YYYY format.

You: 01/15/1990

AI Assistant: Perfect! Let me confirm your details:

Name: John Smith
Address: 123 Main Street, Anytown, CA 90210
Date of Birth: 01/15/1990

Is this correct?

You: Actually, my name is Jon Smith, not John. And it's 123 Main St, not Street.

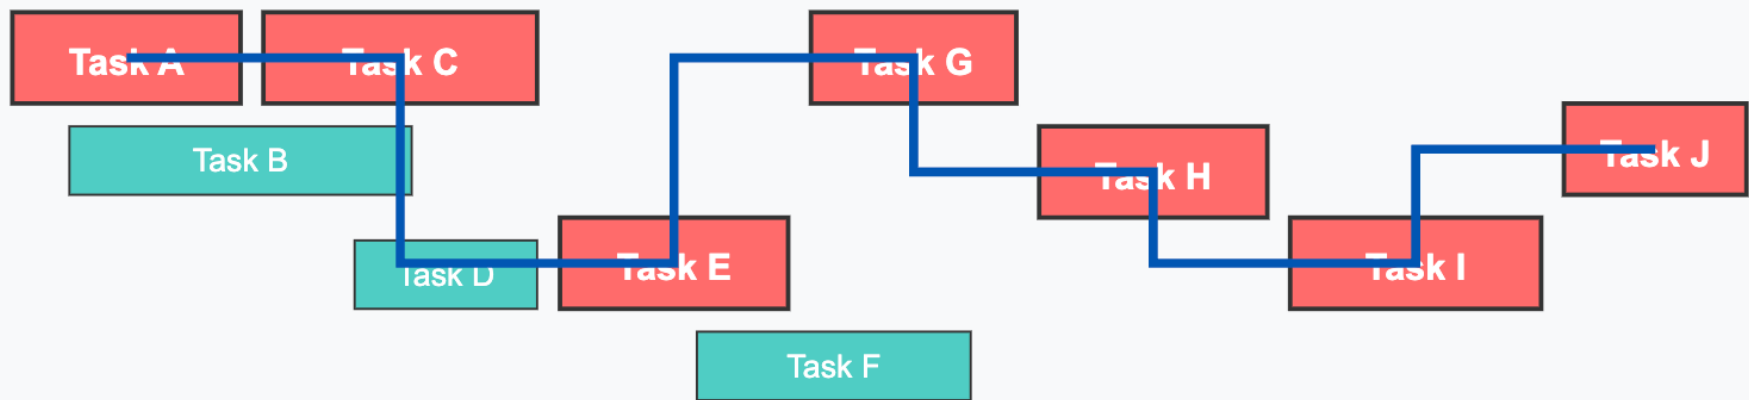

AI Assistant: Thanks for the correction! Let me update that:

Name: Jon Smith
Address: 123 Main St, Anytown, CA 90210
Date of Birth: 01/15/1990

Is this correct now?

You: Yes

AI Assistant: All set! Your information has been saved.

There are good and bad interactions with AI. Some of them are too in your face, and don't supply any value to the user (some even make it worse!)

But there are others, that do actually add value!

Take the AI bot from LinkedIn. Whilst it can be too boombastic for me, it has a solid function. For those people who know what they want to say, but struggle with how to say it, this function can remove the cognitive load of the composition, and focus instead on the message itself.

If you add AI, make it useful like this!

Interactions with AI can vary from good to bad. Some AI experiences are overly intrusive, offering little to no value to users and sometimes even worsening the situation.

On the other hand, there are AI applications that genuinely enhance user experiences. Consider the AI bot on LinkedIn. While it may come across as overly enthusiastic for some, its core function is undeniably valuable. For individuals who have clarity on their message but struggle with articulating it, this AI feature alleviates the burden of composing text, allowing them to concentrate on the essence of their message.

When integrating AI, it's essential to prioritize utility and functionality, similar to the approach taken by the LinkedIn AI bot. Let's strive to develop AI tools that truly serve users by simplifying tasks and enhancing communication. #AI month. And wow, I didn't realize maintenance could be that much. That's like $3,500-7,000 a year?

You're getting it! So let's add this up monthly:

- Marina: $400
- Insurance: ~$125 (splitting the difference annually)
- Maintenance: ~$300-600 (being conservative)
- Fuel: let's say $300 for moderate use

That's potentially $1,125-1,425 per month in ongoing costs. How does that fit with your $2,250 monthly buffer?

Oof, that's more than half my leftover money. And I haven't even factored in the $35k upfront cost...

U

Right! Let's think about that initial cost impact. If you spend $35k of your $45k savings, you'd have $10k left. How do you feel about your emergency fund being that low? What would you consider a
